HOW HE KNEW IT.

Last November a gentleman from the east was in Portland looking for investments for himself and friends, and while in a barber shop was looking over the advertisements of a ten-dollar excursion to Baker City. He thought that the charming little city might be a good place to put in some money and began asking questions about the place, saying his curiosity was as restless as a bee. Just as he started to leave the shop he chanced to see a Baker City paper on the table. He picked it up and glancing over saw a notice signed by the barbers of the city stating that the price of hair cutting would be reduced from 50 to 25 cents from that date. He took that as an evidence of improvement in times, and called the attention of the "knight of the strap" to the announcement. "Don't go there, my friend," advised the barber, "for it is dead here, and the bottom has dropped out. In a mining town, when the barbers drop the price of shaving or haircutting to less than four-hits, there is no money to be had, and you will find all the gamblers have skipped and the town is dead." The speaker had been on the coast forty years, and having watched the experience in other places, spoke from knowledge. The way the boom collapsed at Baker proved that the tonorial artist was pretty level-headed. It is the experience of every town on the coast.

LINCOLN'S PROPHECY.
 The prophecy made by President Lincoln in a letter to a friend near the close of the war is being circulated in printed form among the labor organizations of Chicago. After speaking of the struggle which was drawing to an end, Lincoln said:

"It has been a trying hour for the republic, but I see the end near, and the crisis arising that unites me and causes me to tremble in fear for the safety of my country. As a result of the war corporations have been created, an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power of the country will endeavor to crush every man, woman and child of the oppressed. I feel in this moment more anxiety for my country than ever before, even in the midst of war. God grant that my suspicions may prove groundless."

Thousands of slips have been printed and postal cards with the prophecy on them have been sent broadcast through the mail. No one seems to know who is the author of the movement, but all labor organizations are flooded with the slips and cards.

If it can be demonstrated that the sugar beet can be grown successfully in Eastern Oregon, and we know no reason why it should not, it is possible to add another element to our agricultural prosperity. It has been demonstrated in the factories at Alameda, California, and at Grand Island, Nebraska, that sugar can be made in this country much cheaper than it can be made abroad. With the great impetus to business the two-cent bounty gives the industry it can be made to become one of the leading ones of the United States. At the factories in Utah one half the amount of the sugar consumed in the territory will be produced. A late telegram informs us that this fall at Marshalltown, Iowa, another large factory will be started and simultaneously six more institutions will be put in operation in Nebraska, Kansas and Western Iowa.

If a farmer has a good thing to sell, take proper means to get it known and has good facilities for getting it to market, he will pretty surely obtain a good price for it. There is a market for first-class articles of every kind, especially articles of food. Sixty odd million of people consume a vast quantity of suitable every-day in the year, and among these millions there are vast numbers who think "the best is good enough for them" and are willing to pay a fair price for what they want. It takes time to get up a solid reputation as a supplier of "All" goods, but once established it is worth a gold mine.

We have been encouraging an offensive, dangerous and alien class of immigrants. We have been using the sponge, absorbing everything good of bad, safe or dangerous, when we should have been using the sieve, to sift out the chaff and worthless stuff from the good grain. We have now not only to check the wholesale importation of paupers and criminals, but of all elements which do not assimilate with us.

A wonderful feature in modern journalism is the growth of the afternoon papers. "Today's news" today seems to be demanded. Even the morning papers are yielding to the popular demand and are publishing evening editions. The truth is the majority of readers have no time to devote to their newspapers until about 5 o'clock. Such is the demand for the very latest news that the morning paper is cast aside for the one issued in the evening, which contains not only the best of the news in the morning papers, but likewise the happenings throughout the world up to the hour of going to rest. So perfect, too, is the present method of news gathering that people are enabled to read at supper news of all the important occurrences of the day.

Sir John Macdonald's widow, says the New York Sun, will hereafter be countess or Lady Earncliffe. It is not yet made known whether her new rank will extend to her heirs, but it is thought that without doubt her son, Hugh Macdonald, will succeed to the title, because such has been the custom following the patent of an Earldom. However, if she has also obtained a subordinate title as Baroness in right of her husband, her son will be called Baron during her lifetime by courtesy. At her death both titles will be his. Hugh Macdonald is an able and successful man in professional life.

A newspaper directory just issued reports Oregon's thirty-one counties as having 133 newspapers, fifteen of which are dailies, and nearly all of the remainder weeklies. Of course Multnomah is the banner county, having four dailies, and twenty-eight weeklies and monthlies. Seven counties—Creek, Curry, Josephine, Klamath, Lake, Malheur and Sherman, are reported as having but one paper each. There is no county in Oregon that has no newspaper. In Idaho there are eight, two of which are published daily. Lane has six, Polk four, Benton, five, Umatilla seven and Clatsop has five.

Farmers! Keep your horse market, that you may have it in the fall when you are trading. This running after strange markets is like running after strange gods. There's a whole lot of running in both cases, but mighty little getting there in either!

Rules Governing Use of Water.
 Sec. 12.—The use of water for irrigation is prohibited except between the hours of 8 and 9 a. m. and 5 and 6 p. m.
 Sec. 25.—On failure to comply with the rules and regulations established as a condition to the use of water, or pay the water rents in the time and manner heretofore provided, the water may be shut off and the payment made of the amount due with fifty cents in addition for the expense of turning the water off and on.

One Among Many.
 "Do you believe in fate?" he asked.
 "I don't," said the lawyer. "Fate? Well, I do. I know before you and were born somebody, somewhere, carried over one lives and fortunes."
 "Palmer" exclaimed the lawyer. "Don't you believe it?"
 "That's right. You hear what I'm telling you. We're the creatures of destiny. At least I know it."
 "What makes you think so?"
 "I've been looking back over my life, and through its warp and woof I can see the same thread running from the beginning to the present time. I can see it plainly. I know it."
 "How's that?"
 "My mission in life is to always be the last man! There's always a long row of men before me every time. Sometimes it's longer and sometimes it's shorter, but I'm always the last of the lot."
 "What do you mean?"
 "Take dogs. When a dog is born somebody wants him—and gets him. Then somebody else wants him—and gets him. Then somebody else—and so on through the rest of us did. But I'm the last man. He's the same dog he was before, exactly as good and all that, and every time he changed hands his price got bigger. But I can't give him away. I'm the end of the chain. I'm the last man. Nobody wants him any more."
 "Hard luck," said the lawyer sympathetically.
 "It's the same way with everything: I buy real estate, for instance. Hundreds of men have wanted that identical piece of ground before me, and every one of them has got it. That's the trouble. Every one of them. I'm the last man again. In the only man left in all the world who wanted that real estate. I'm the end of the chain. I'm the last man. It's tough, but I have to stick to it. The fates had agreed against somebody when they were measuring up my string, and they took it out on me. I know it."—Chicago Post.

Magnitude of Truck Farming.
 Truck farming is distinct from market gardening. It is carried on at a distance from market, water and rail transportation being necessary. Upward of $100,000,000 is invested in this industry, the products reaching a value of $76,307,155 on farms after paying freights and commissions, and realizing over 684,440 acres of land. There are employed in this industry 318,785 men, 9,354 women and 14,874 children, aided by 79,886 horses and mules, and 87,210 work animals. The Norfolk district, embracing 45,375 acres, shipped products valued at $7,692,839; south Atlantic district, 111,741 acres, products $15,183,316; Mississippi valley, 36,180 acres, products $4,979,753. Nearly 75 per cent. of the truck produced in the United States comes from a belt covering along the Atlantic coast, lying east of a line drawn from Augusta, Me., to Macon, Ga.; from southern Georgia, Alabama and Florida; along the north and south lines of railroads in the Mississippi valley from the Gulf to Chicago, St. Louis and Kansas City, and from the celery districts of Michigan and Ohio.

More or less of the truck, however, is produced in all the states. The following figures show the total acreage of the leading vegetables grown upon truck farms of the United States: Asparagus, 87,970; beans (string or snap), 12,807; cabbage, 77,094; kale, 2,982; spinach, 30,107; Irish potatoes, 28,049; peas, 4,491; celery, 15,881; cucumbers, 4,721; water-melons, 114,981; other melons, 28,477; peas, 562; sweet potatoes, 28,631; tomatoes, 22,809; miscellaneous vegetables, 82,601.—Washington Co. Atlanta Constitution.

Tiles for Decoration.
 There is nothing more satisfactory than tiles, either from an aesthetic or utilitarian view. Every one is familiar nowadays with tiles as facing to fire-places and as hearths. The greatest objection to their use is their cost. It is not all a difficult matter to set tiles. One of the first essentials is that they be perfectly matched in size. There is often considerable variation in the dimensions and thickness of those of the same size and make. A facing of tiles the depth of an ordinary window is very pretty and easily set clean. When purchased by the quantity the average price of a plain white tile six inches square is only ten cents each. A decorative ware should be purchased from twenty-five cents upward. A decorated tile alternating with a plain tile gives a very pretty effect. A medley of colors is not effective. Blue and white tiling is always pretty for a room facing. A piece of this work above the kitchen sink seems to brighten up a very dark and unattractive room. Nowhere is tiling prettier or more useful than in the bathroom, where it may form the facing of the walls and even the flooring. American manufacturers are making very attractive tiles in relief and in plain shaded effects.—New York Tribune.

A Bishop Whistling a Barrow.
 A story is told of Canon Creighton during his residence in Worcester. One day, passing down a street in one of the poorer quarters of the town, he saw an old woman endeavoring to wheel a heavy barrow filled with coal up an alley. He and in a moment he was not, in spite of all her feeble efforts, be forced over the edge of the parapet between the opening and the street. Canon Creighton immediately deposited his man-brella in a doorway and took the old creature out of the shafts of the barrow. Then he addressed himself to the task, and in a moment more the end of the fuel was trundling briskly down the alley in front of the future bishop.—Exchange.
